A retired scientist from Dow Corning Corporation has had an interest in drawing since childhood. An art teacher in grade school advised that he take lessons if the opportunity ever arose, but it wasn't until retirement that the advice was seriously pursued.

Preferred media are graphite and colored pencil drawings. There is also experimentation with pastel, acrylics, and watercolor. Emphasis is on portraiture, although there may be an occasional landscape or animal drawing. A story is typically associated with the drawings and humor or science may sometimes creep in. Some pieces have won awards at local juried exhibitions.
